An Excerpt from Jack Goes West

The wagon train had been traveling for weeks, and Jack was starting to get restless. He had spent his whole life on the farm, and he was eager to see the world. One day, he decided to go for a walk.

He walked for hours, and eventually he came to a river. He sat down on the bank and looked at the water. He could see the reflection of the trees and the clouds in the water, and it was like looking into another world.

Jack closed his eyes and listened to the sound of the water. He could feel the sun on his face, and he felt at peace. He had never felt so content in his whole life.

Suddenly, Jack heard a noise. He opened his eyes and looked around. He saw a group of men on horseback riding towards him.

The men were all armed, and they looked dangerous. Jack knew that he had to get away.

He jumped to his feet and ran. The men chased after him, but Jack was faster. He ran and ran until he could no longer hear the sound of their horses.

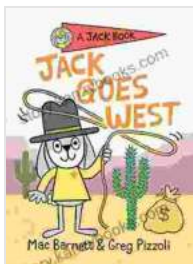

Jack collapsed on the ground, exhausted. He had never been so scared in his life.

But he was also proud of himself. He had faced his fears and he had come out on top.
