One night, Winnie was working on a special potion. She wanted to make a potion that would make her fly. She gathered all of the ingredients she needed, and she began to mix them together.

But something went wrong. The potion started to bubble and fizz, and it turned a strange color. Winnie tried to stop it, but it was too late. The potion exploded, and Winnie was covered in green goo.

Winnie was so upset. She had ruined her potion, and she didn't know how she was going to fly. She started to cry.

Just then, her friend Batty the bat flew in. Batty saw Winnie crying, and he asked her what was wrong.

Winnie told Batty about the potion, and Batty started to laugh.

"Don't worry, Winnie," said Batty. "I know how to make a potion that will make you fly."

Batty flew over to his bookshelf and pulled out a book. He flipped through the pages until he found the recipe he was looking for.

"Here it is," said Batty. "This is the recipe for the Flying Potion."

Winnie looked at the recipe. It was a lot of ingredients, but she had most of them in her cottage.

"I can make this," said Winnie. "Thank you, Batty."

Winnie gathered all of the ingredients, and she began to mix them together. This time, the potion didn't explode. Instead, it turned a beautiful blue color.

Winnie took a sip of the potion, and she felt a tingling sensation. She looked down at her feet, and she saw that she was floating off the ground.

"It worked!" cried Winnie. "I can fly!"

Winnie and Batty flew around the cottage, laughing and having fun. They flew out the window and into the night sky.

They flew over the trees and the houses. They flew over the moon and the stars.

Winnie had never felt so happy. She had always dreamed of flying, and now her dream had come true.

Winnie and Batty flew all night long. They had the most amazing time.

In the morning, Winnie flew back to her cottage. She landed in her garden, and she thanked Batty for his help.

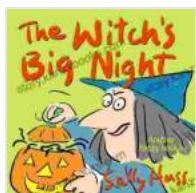

"I couldn't have done it without you," said Winnie.

"You're welcome," said Batty. "I'm just glad I could help."

Winnie went inside her cottage and went to bed. She was exhausted, but she was also very happy. She had had the best night of her life.

The next day, Winnie woke up feeling refreshed and energized. She went outside and looked up at the sky.

She saw a group of birds flying overhead. Winnie smiled. She knew that she could fly too, and she couldn't wait to go on another adventure.
